(State Conference
April 27—29)

In my professional capacity, I have served in the tax-exempt finance arena for over 40 years primarily as a financial manager and chief financial officer. The profit margins in many tax-exempt organizations is very slim, if there is any margin at all. Therefore, much scrutiny is taken when any new program or service is proposed and its impact on the bottom line. Many in the finance industry would call this a return on investment. In the tax-exempt industry, particularly when there are services provided, many would ask what is the value this service may provide or the value added to the organization.

Crime Stoppers programs are sometimes asked what is the value Crime Stoppers provides to the community. The most common answers provided by Crime Stoppers programs is to share some of the wonderful statistics our programs have generated over the years. For example, the number of arrests associated with an anonymous Crime Stoppers tip or how many cases have been solved, many of which may have been cold cases up until that point. Of course, programs also point out to the stolen property recovered and drugs seized from an anonymous Crime Stoppers tip. Finally, these programs may also identify a dollar amount or how many rewards have been paid out on behalf of solving these cases. These are all excellent pieces of information to share with the community.

However, is there a useful statistic or calculation to share in quantifying a value that Crime Stoppers may provide to the community. In finance, return on investment, in its simplest form of calculation, is taking the benefit, or return, of an investment and divided by the cost of that investment. Unfortunately, the numerator and denominator in this equation are not readily available to Crime Stoppers programs to show a value in this manner.

Many Crime Stoppers programs have been recently confronted with their law enforcement agency partners indicating that budget reductions need to be made and sometimes the most logical choice seems to be reducing the amount of manpower provided to the local Crime Stoppers program. Is there an easy way to share with the law enforcement agency partners that by cutting or eliminating the Crime Stoppers Coordinator hours may actually cost the law enforcement agency more money? I think you can!

Understanding that most local Crime Stoppers organizations are based on an all volunteer, community board and one of their primary missions is to receive anonymous tips and pay out cash rewards to those eligible, the local Crime Stoppers organization has a very lean overhead component in solving crimes. On the other hand, if the Crime Stoppers organization did not exist and law enforcement had to undertake the resolution of a particular crime from start to finish without an anonymous tip, what would be the cost on solving that case?

Allow me to share a hypothetical community example. Let's say a particular law enforcement agency has an annual operating budget of approximately $25 million, and the number of cases cleared during the year amounted to 1000. By an easy calculation, this would suggest that it costs approximately $25,000 in clearing each case. On the other hand, the local Crime Stoppers program in the same community, through its anonymous tips, have assisted in solving over 100 cases during the year and paid out rewards of $20,000, or $200 per solved case. (Note, $100 is the average reward paid by Crime Stoppers throughout the United States, as reported by Crime Stoppers USA statistics).

The Value of Crime Stoppers

The correlation drawn from the above hypothetical example is that without a local Crime Stoppers program, solving a case from start to finish by the law enforcement agency alone costs $25,000 as opposed to receiving a Crime Stoppers tip which costs the local Crime Stoppers program $200 and no cost to the law enforcement agency (since rewards are paid from donations received by Crime Stoppers). This is the value of Crime Stoppers to the local community! To extrapolate this information further, if a local Crime Stoppers organization did not exist in the community and every case had to be solved from start to finish by law enforcement personnel only, this would potentially increase the law enforcement agencies budget by $2.5 million ($25,000 to clear a case times 100 cases solved by Crime Stoppers anonymous tips), or solve less crime without the added manpower.

Of course, Crime Stoppers can't take all the credit as it is important to understand that an anonymous Crime Stoppers tip doesn't immediately close a case, as there is additional investigative and paperwork that must be completed before an arrest and charges are made. However, Crime Stoppers usually provides a significant shortcut to law enforcement agencies in getting to this investigative stage with the name of a suspect, a license plate from a car or some other significant information which cuts down the required manpower in resolving an outstanding crime.

Crime Stoppers is becoming one of the invaluable tools in the toolbox for law enforcement agencies. There are many pressures on many of our chiefs and sheriffs in responding to operating budget challenges. Remember to be advocates of the Crime Stoppers tool when meeting with your local law enforcement agency officials. Crime Stoppers is a very important tool in their crime fighting tool box and a value to the community!

FUNNELING OF INFORMANTS THREATENS PROGRAM

by Greg MacAleese, Founder Crime Stoppers

At no time in its history has Crime Stoppers been more successful.

We are witnessing the rapid international expansion of the program. In the United States, cases are being solved through Crime Stoppers tips at a record rate. And we have been flattered by imitators, such as "America's Most Wanted" television show.

Yet, I don't think we should sit back and smugly think that everything is perfect with the program. Recently, several programs have experienced a problem that could threaten the basic foundation of Crime Stoppers – both legally and ethically.

This problem is the "funneling" of informants into the Crime Stoppers program. "Funneled" informants are those whose identities are known to law enforcement personnel and who have not directly contacted Crime Stoppers. In this situation, the coordinator will be approached directly by other officers about giving one of their informants a Crime Stoppers code number. Often this is done under the pretext that the informant will not cooperate with investigators without getting some money and a pledge that confidentiality will be maintained.

This places the coordinator in an extremely difficult position. Should they cooperate? The truth is that if the coordinator provides the code number, the integrity of the Crime

Stoppers program has been breached. This is especially true if the coordinator then presents the case to the Board of Directors without advising them that this is a "funneled" informant. The board's authority to judge the case on its actual merits is usurped. On the other hand, if the coordinator does not cooperate, this sometimes creates hard feelings between them and the investigator.

Occasionally, the coordinator is not given a choice. The investigator will instruct the informant to just call Crime Stoppers with the information, get a code number and not let on that they are already working with the investigator. The coordinator and the Board of Directors never know that they are being "conned" by both the informant and another member of their law enforcement agencies.

The implications of what I have described here are pretty obvious. In an extremely important court test of Crime Stoppers, Brown vs. Illinois, the program was described by a defense attorney as being a "sham" organization that was really a front for law enforcement. Thus, there would be no corporate protection of Crime Stoppers records and they would be subject to the Open Records Act.

Obviously, the coordinator needs some protection in these instances. The best way to ensure this protection is the creation of an internal policy within the police department, which strictly curtails the use of "funneled" informants. The Board of Directors should be consulted by the law

2017 Conference Highlights (Tentative Topics/Speakers)

Technology Session — Thursday evening from 6:30pm - 7:30pm we will have Officer Joseph Nichols, Coordinator of the Winnebago Countywide Crime Stoppers, discuss some of the Dangers of Social Media. This will be followed up with Officer Joseph Nichols and Officer Chad Sullivan, Coordinator of Janesville Area CS, providing one-on-one training session on social media to include Facebook, Twitter and Google+ for Hangouts On Air. Time will also be devoted discussing the tip taking software tools, TipSoft and, recently released, P3 Global Intel. Learn how to extract the statistical data for presentation to the board, your command staff or the media. Also, we will show some ways in which to utilize Google & YouTube account to promote your program, put out public notices or advertise crimes of the week. Bring your laptop to this hands-on learning session. (Meet & Greet Tailgate Buffet, burgers and brats, will be held in an adjacent room, serving from 6p-7:30p).

Barb Bergin, Crime Stoppers USA Chair — We are excited to welcome Barb to Wisconsin as the newly elected Chair of Crime Stoppers USA. She is the Executive Director of the Central Florida Crimeline, one of the largest Crime Stoppers organizations in the United States covering 12 counties from the Gulf coast to the Atlantic Coast. Barb will discuss some of their unique fundraising activities in Central Florida Crime line, share your perspectives as the new leader of Crime Stoppers USA and offer some specifics for board members on operating a local Crime Stoppers program.

Heroin Epidemic — We are proud to announce that Kathy Federico from the Milwaukee DEA office is making a return visit to the conference giving participants the details about the heroin epidemic that has run rampant the last several years and will provide insight to other drug enforcement activities in Wisconsin. Kathy is excited about returning to the Wisconsin State Crime Stoppers conference.

Crime Prevention Restitution Bill — Pat Murphy President of the Brown County Crime Prevention Organization will outline in detail how his County was able to implement the new restitution Bill available for Crime Prevention Organizations in the state of Wisconsin. This has been difficult for many counties within Wisconsin, so this may offer insight on how to proceed within your own County in receiving these restitution funds.

Human Trafficking — Following up on this highly rated topic from last year, Detective Tamara Remington from the Sheboygan Police Department will offer her insight from the Sheboygan Coalition Against Human Trafficking Detective Remington will share their perspective on how the Coalition looks at 'victims' of human trafficking instead of criminals and some of the startling statistics affecting our community through human trafficking.

enforcement leaders before such a policy is developed.

Of course, there is a broader issue at stake in such a situation. That issue is: "Who is in charge of Crime Stoppers?" Is it the Board of Directors, or is it the law enforcement agency?

In reality it is both. Crime Stoppers was originally designed to be a cooperative effort among law enforcement, the community and the media. Law enforcement was charged with the responsibility of handling the operational part of the program. The community, through the Board of Directors, was supposed to raise the reward fund and create policy for the operation of the program. And the media was responsible for publicity. Unfortunately, a few programs have drifted from this original design. The Board of Directors has failed to provide proper oversight; and law enforcement, without any policy to follow, has been left with "flying by the seats of their pants" in the day-to-day operation of the program.

Clearly, in these circumstances, abuses are invited. Fortunately, these are extremely rare circumstances and have not caused any serious public relations or legal problems. However, right from the beginning, I have said that Crime Stoppers is a fragile concept that is only as good as our weakest program. A program that is improperly managed puts all of us at risk. As they say, "Bad arrests make bad laws." Well, so do Crime Stoppers programs that operate outside the proper guidelines.
